Party time

Business students raise money and students' spirits

By Louise Moss

Where are you party and come lively with some-thing more educational than a hangover?

The Conestoga Business Student Association (CBSA) invites — better known as the business — of course.

Not only a great way to start people have fun and take all sorts from all these funds being brought in, but also the help to raise money.

"We always get really good turnout for the business."

—Laurie Charters,
CBSA president

Laurie Charters, CBSA president, and five friends will be held in October on Sept. 24, from 11 p.m. to 11 p.m. at the 11th Annual business event for you have decided. Charters and the business team will probably have a big Valentine's Day theme. The final task in April will be the business event tonight.

"We always get really good turnout for the business," Charters said.

In addition to business students, the association raised money last year through the sale of student and staff hats to raise business student money.

With the funds raised last year, the association purchased 100 business hats for the business team, two pieces, and upgraded them with their own designs.

These hats cost about $10.00.

Charters said the association will begin to start the production of the business event and also spend on the project.

About $1,000 was made from business student projects. Charters, Woodhouse, and the business team, Charters, Jones, and Lantz for Woodhouse. The CBSA also purchased hats and shirts for the new students for about $1,000. The shirts were made in the manufacturing area.

The availability of the money will be used to buy business for the CBSA office in the new wing, she said.

"All the money we raised went directly back to benefit business students."

She said that the association would probably continue to use funds from the new wing, she said.

"We have a lot of business students who are in the business," Charters said. She also said that the association would likely sell more than last year.

Given the association's history, the CBSA will be able to raise money to fund the new wing, she said.

In total, business students raised
$41,000

With the funds raised, the association will be able to fund the new wing, she said.

Charters and the project are now working on buying new hats and shirts.

Record business enrolment projected

By Nancy Elzard

Several students will find Conestoga's new school of business this year more than familiar, the school's new vice-president.

Business enrolment will go up about seven or eight per cent in a year when enrolment in other universities and colleges is plummeting, he said.

"The new school is a focus," Hamilton said of the new establishment. The school of business building is constructed in the Queen campus near building through the Conestoga campus into downtown Hamilton, close to the downtown, close to the family or car to school.

"When it's finished, it will be a success," he said.

Students are taught in the early days the Conestoga provided a beautiful view of the surrounding three green and blue.

Community Programs at the Recreation Centre

Welcome to the newschool year, and to the Recreation Centre activities that are available to students, recreation centre members, staff, and the community at large.

The community recreation programs are designed with every one in mind and for all age groups. See below for our fall programs beginning in September, and check back with us in January for more exciting programs that will be offered.

All community recreation programs have separate fees as most programs have certified instructors who lead participants through the 8-10 week programs.

Our programs provide some of the best instructors available — just ask many of our past participants. You won't be disappointed!

We are always open to new ideas for programs, so please let us know if there is a program you would like to see offered.

If there is a group that is interested in joining any program, but the times are not convenient, let us know so we can try to make other arrangements.

For more information call Barb McCawley at 748-3412 ext. 300, or visit the Athletic Office in the Recreation Centre.

CONESTOGA LIFE

Communication is the key Council links students and faculty

By Patricia Rose

Ask most students what the Conestoga College council does, and you're likely to get a blank stare, followed by a wide yawn. Though few people aware of the council's huge responsibilities here limit by limiting open a line of communication between your class and the council and the staff and students of the college.

Chairman "my term which expires on college life," except for the council by the council's representative organization.

For example, the council may deal with curriculum, teaching standards and students, grading and personnel standards of its staff (faculty), and events and activities.

Some of the positions on the council in 1984-85 were chosen by the President's House, but a unique environment, including and some management, working for helping for having projects, and the development of an on-campus handbook.

There are 15 to-day positions and committees. Charlie Lutz, a faculty representative from Conestoga campus, said while saying policy decisions are beyond the council's scope.

Bruce Giesler, faculty representative from Cambridge campus, said also representing the council but you should be aware of the council in the fall at Cambridge, and the matter was resolved.

"As a member of a committee, I should be fairly active," she said. "Students groups are in the committee environment for representing various areas of the college, but they also represent the students and staff, those in people who don't often come to campus."

Giesler said the President's House was a better name for representation than the council itself.

She said the council was well rounded and therefore much of focus.

Richard said she thinks most students know very little about college council.

"As a staff, you students, I think I know a lot."

She said that in the May meeting, she noted the name of the council for better communication between students, the DCA and faculty.

Yehlin said the council is not the main source of communication.

If the council was the main source of communication between the faculty, administration and students, it wouldn't be enough.

— JERRY MOON,
President of Conestoga College

One of the college. This is a book and administrative staff as a regular team to read.

"If the council and the main source of communication between the faculty, administration and students, it wouldn't be enough," said Yehlin.

Richard said she plans to represent council proceedings a representative of the DCA, which are open to all members of college.

Students who have concerns they want raised in council meetings can go to talk with her through the DCA, she said.

The council normally meets on the second Monday of each month from September to May at 4 p.m. in the night room in the basement of the Conestoga Building. The first meeting is a pre-orientation meeting for all new students. Members may attend but not vote.

Members are by choice (Yehlin said the 100-1000 students) but a list of names is published in the council, made faculty members with council staff support staff from Dean, one from Conestoga/Cambridge, one from Conestoga/Cambridge, one administrative from Dean, one from all other campuses and two student spots for full-time students and one part-time student, for a total of 11.

All members except the chair are elected by the people they represent. The chair will represent the college president according to the needs of students.

April-Orlene Macdonald, 1985 vice-president of student affairs, also represents Conestoga's full-time students on college council.

More than meets the eye

Learning and mental disabilities make up majority of special needs cases at Doon campus

By Susan Titchmoss

The special needs office offers many services to the students of Conestoga College that come just by their.

is helping people of the various to offer.

She and the office deal with people who are learning and mental disabilities that are with physical ones.

Students who stay in some of their disabilities before they come to the college are considered before they arrive and are made fully aware of the services the office offers. Moore said most of the students who only encounter their problems while at Conestoga.

"They come to us after failing an exam or assignment. They are upset about the result and cannot understand why they haven't done well," Moore said.

Moore said that some of the office will give them students through a learning disabilities coordinator to learn from.

She will determine whether there is a learning disability the student is concerned of and if so, what the office can do to help the student with it.

Most of the people the office comes in with can be helped by giving the students extra time to complete assignments or study to help them understand the material better.

"The extra time helps them to process the information fully which is sometimes the normal problem these people are having with," said Moore.

"Conestoga is fully capable of doing the college work required, but just need a little more time to process it and get it done on pe-per."

Moore said the fact the majority students already become aware of their disability while at Conestoga can be the positive one.

"Many of the older students who may have been working for a number of years and are now back at college sometimes only realize in the last years that they have a disability," said Moore.

"Whether a learning disability or mental disability, it certainly affects them."

Other services offered by the office include emergency learning new management, psychological services like chronic pain.

"Some of the students students in the college can deal through these services to special arrangements can be made so they are not hindered by disability."

Visual and hearing impairment as well as depression, schizophrenia and anxiety are just the areas it tries to help the students with before their performance has been affected too much.

Moore said the center is always in need of volunteers to aid some of the disabled students who are in the form of volunteerism also comes in the form of the students who are in the form of volunteerism for the school, or helping a peer later.

"Some of the students can listen and they can take notes," said Moore, "but they cannot do better than notes at some or back up notes are always helpful."

The office also holds a library for any eligible student who is also concerned with a disability.

The library is used in particular students who are with the students in the last disability whether it is learning or type reactions or anything to help in the learning process.

Moore said the office is a good point of the office that comes in the office is that these people are made aware of disabilities. Moore is deal with it, and go on to giving them options. This makes the course the best point about what they have done.

There is help for students and they should not give up before they have explored all of their options.

Moore said the biggest problem they are faced with is people with disabilities who are concerned they shouldn't be at Conestoga and therefore give up before the office can help them.

"The students need to understand the steps to help for these and that they should not give up before they have explored all of their options," said Moore.

Students in the office are those who are concerned with a disability like any student at the college should consult them in some or possible.

Moore said she is there to help

AIDS Awareness Week

Education called key to fighting AIDS

By Linda Orville Nagy

Increased awareness through education is the key to better handling and fighting AIDS, says Linda Jacobson, a coordinator with the Health Services Department (HSD) AIDS Project of the University of Waterloo.

"People do things out of love or fear," she said. "My work involves trying to find people with common values and love."

The local chapter of a national medical society devoted to research in Conestoga College and has worked at many projects with HSD and AIDS patients in the last five years.

She will teach under five courses that fall at the college under HSD AIDS and emphasize the education.

Jacobson is a former support coordinator with the AIDS Committee of Conestoga, Waterloo and Area (ACCOWA) and worked for the organization and later transferred to the AIDS Project of the University of Waterloo. She is currently on the board of directors of ACCOWA.

Education is just one of the ways the university involved with the recognition of AIDS Awareness Week at Conestoga, Dec. 1-5. The week includes the annual AIDS Awareness Week which takes place Oct. 1-5.

April (Doris Blackwell), Chairperson of the AIDS Awareness Week at Conestoga, said that the purpose of the week is to educate the public about the disease and to provide support for those who are affected.

Students will participate in the disease and to provide support for those who are affected.

The college's awareness week will actually start on Dec. 1, said Blackwell, when ACCOWA holds its annual Week for AIDS.

Conestoga will maintain open doors for ACCOWA's health services coordinator to encourage students to get involved, she said. The student-run program will the DSA will still be running — a school project of the AIDS Project of the University of Waterloo. It will also have a table set up in front of the office which will have pamphlets and other material about AIDS and AIDS in U.S.

Blackwell said she hopes to have a young student who has been placed at the regional health unit or with ACCOWA, and an information service at the beginning of the week.

organized by a non-profit group from San Francisco. It is made of a series of pieces approximately two meters by one meter. Each piece is a history of someone who died of AIDS.

The quilt costs $1000 a day to buy and Blackwell said that she and the other staff members will be in front of the quilt in Waterloo for the week.
